We do not want to give the impression that the cost of education is not going to increase. It is doing that in your current year. As our population grows so will the number of teachers. And as the teacher salaries gradually are brought up to a realistic figure we can expect annual increases in the operating budget.

But you can not blame a new school for these increases. You would have them in an old building, and they would be even larger because of the need for rented space and costly methods. The remodeling of an old school also loses you valuable tax dollars through the many buildings which are razed to allow for enlargement.

Here Comes the Library!

By BLAKE CLARK

(Inasmuch as bookmobiles seem to be of prime interest in this area with the state about to approve Warren county for a library demonstration, we are publishing an article which appeared in the midmonth magazine of the Methodist church. The article was in the April issue of "Together" and we have held it for library week. It was written by Blake Clark, and this month appeared in the Reader's Digest. Both

Son, where is your library?" a visitor asked a boy in a Midwest country village. "You missed it, sir," the youngster said. "It just went to 1,500 books a day. around the corner."

Every Monday morning some 1,000 bookmobiles, libraries on wheels, each carrying 1,500 to 3,000 volumes, fan out across the U.S., taking fun and philosophy, fiction and fact, self-help and inspiration to people in isolated areas far from a public library. They roll past Montana wheat fields and Louisiana cane, the snow-capped peaks of Colorado and white-steepled churches of New England, to keep their rendezvous with weatherbeaten, gnarled-fingered farmers, busy housewives, boys and girls in blue jeans, and groups of kindergartners eager for a story hour.

Bookmobiling is reaching high speed because of the Library Services Act, passed three years ago to provide federal aid in getting more books to people in rural counties of less than 10,000 population. The need is tremendous. Twentyseven million Americans have no local book-lending service. Fifty-three million others have only inadequate library facilities. Throughout the entire country there are towns, small cities, and even medium-sized cities without any publicly distributed books at all. Of the 3,000-odd counties in the U.S., 404 do not have a single lending library within their borders. New and improved library service penetrating these literary deserts reached some 11 million persons in 1800-odd counties in the last two years. Counties in little-known corners remote from busy towns and cities set. now are full of stories of young and the area, these traveling branch libraries make scheduled stops at schools, post offices, country stores, and crossroads, changing the route added good-humoredly, "If you have each day for three or four weeks. Readers pour in at each stop, return books to the driver, browse along the shelves-slanted to keep their cargo magazines have approved our use of from slipping or bouncing off-and check out their choices with the librarian seated at a little desk in the rear. The mobilibrary stays half an hour to a couple of hours, depending upon the demand, and dispenses 500

> Volumes taken in from one person are frequently let out again at the same stop to someone else. This practice makes for a new community of interest. "Now we talk about books," remarked one countrywoman, "instead of each other."

No limit exists on the number of books a person may take out unless the supply is limited. One Virginia housewife kept increasing the number she borrowed until the librarian became curious. The housewife, it turned out, was taking books by bicycle to homes inaccessible to the bookwagon. At another station, a dairy farmer delivered books on his milk route, handed out others at Grange meetings, and even filled requests for fellow churchgoers before and after Sunday services. And in one New Hampshire village, a family of 12 signs in and out some 125 volumes when the library on wheels calls every eight weeks.

Reading clubs are forming at the crossroads. Some bookmobile stops are at homes where a local chairman checks out 10 to 15 books, then acts as librarian and distributes them to members who read them and meet to discuss them. New England bookmobiles regularly supply small-town groups with the intellectual fare for their Great Books studies. A farmer's wife in the South read Arnold Toynbee's one-volume A Study of History.

People who have never enjoyed the privilege of a public library really appreciate having the world of books for the asking. A Southern farmer was delighted to learn he could borrow Douglas Southall Freeman's Robert E. Lee. He had never expected to be able to read it, for he "had heard it cost $20." And a nine-yearold peered inside the bookmobile and remarked to the librarian, "I sure hope you don't go out of business, 'cause I couldn't never buy this many books myself."

One of the bookmobile librarian's first tasks is to explain that the books are not for sale but can be enjoyed for nothing. When a couple who lived deep in the Lower Arkansas Valley stepped into the first bookmobile to serve them and realized that the use of these beautiful new books was theirs for the asking, the wife cried, "John! John! We're rich!" Individual choices are unpredictable. A dainty little five-year-old girl was shown several beautiful picture books. The little browser carefully old who have broadened their hori- put them back and with a most solemn air looked at the librarian and

"I want a big book about every-Stocked from a central library in thing," a fifth-grader politely requested of the Butte County, California, bookmobile librarian. An adult patron who overheard the child two of those, I'll take one also." What the little girl really wanted was the large Golden Book of Science.

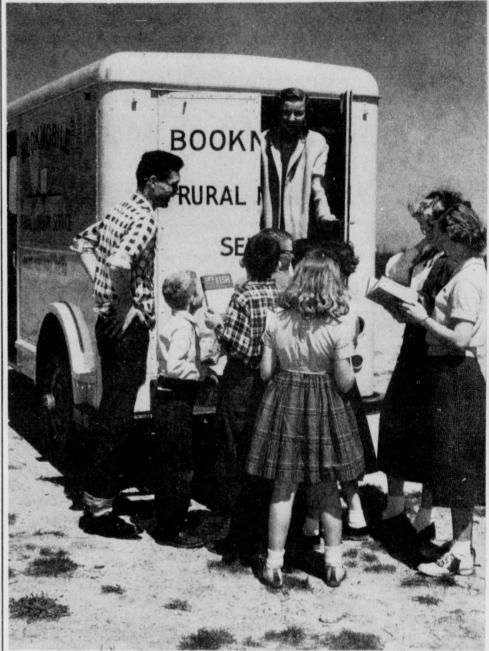

Countless questions keep the librarian busy with the encyclopedia and reference books. A small boy in a New Hampshire village came in swinging the hide of a squirrel he'd shot and asked, "Got a book on how to make a fur hat?" Another asked, "What do you feed a baby bat?" The bat was clinging to his T-shirt when he made the request.

A youngster in search of a book on snakes was asked if he'd take one on rocks as a substitute. "No," he said, "not unless it's got snakes under the rocks."

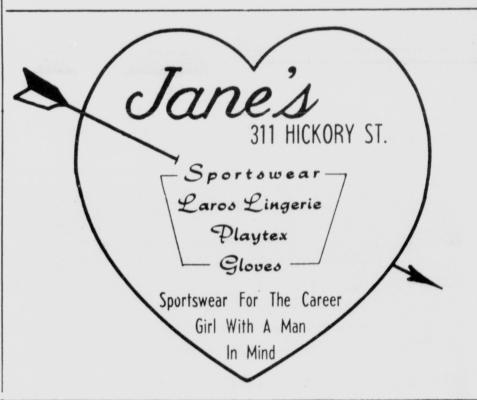

All kinds of citizens come seeking self-help. Clergymen glean thoughts for their sermons from inspirational works and Sunday-school teachers find special classroom aids. Mechanics take manuals on car repair. Mothers study Dr. Spock. Intriguing titles on the do-it-yourself shelf stir resourceful woodsmen and country folk to improve their homes. A Rockcastle County Kentuckian borrowed How to Design and Install Plumbing and got a friend to help him put the fixtures in his newly built house. When he returned the book, he reported that everything worked just fine. An ingenious teacher and schoolboys followed directions in The Wise Home Electrical Handyman and wired their two-room schoolhouse so well that it passed inspection by men of the Rural Electrification Authority. How to Clean Everything and How to Paint and Wallpaper circulate like best sellers. Librarians enjoy seeing the actual results of their work. An amateur astronomer in Thomasville, Ala., asked the bookmobile librarian to find a book that would help him On the bookwagon's next trip, she construct a telescope. She got just the asked for the unabridged, six-volume one he needed through the regional library, which borrowed it from the University of Alabama. Another librarian borrowed the theological books needed by a Methodist minister for a course he was taking at Birmingham-Southern College.

Rural Kentuckians eagerly greet the bookmobile. In the last five years the Blue Grass State has developed the largest fleet of these rolling libraries in the United States.

Since the bookmobile started coming three years ago, she has averaged reading a book a day, many of them on the history of the states, particularly Kentucky. "They've helped me understand why you are as proud of your country as I have always been of mine. I don't feel like a stranger any more," she said.

> Kentuckians have done an outstanding job with bookmobiles. Horrified that the state stood 47th in availability of all library services-47 of the 120 counties had no public libraries and 31 had only hopelessly inferior ones—a group of civicminded residents led by Harry W. Schacter, a Louisville departmentstore executive, organized the Kentucky Bookmobile Project.

> During an intensive 18-month campaign, they raised $300,000 from corporations and individuals, collected and culled 600,000 books, arranged for counties to hire drivers and maintain the trucks, and per-> hardly a soul had been a book reader before. By the end of 1957 a total of nearly 10 million books had been circulated and the percentage of rural people who were without publicliterary service of any kind had dropped from 80 to 10 per cent.

Sponsors of the bookmobiles felt they had an extra dividend when they learned that some children were teaching their parents to read. A woman driver said to a girl checking out a juvenile selection, "Sarah, you can read a much harder book than that." "Yes'm," the child replied. "But this one's for Pappy-it's all the harder he can read yet."

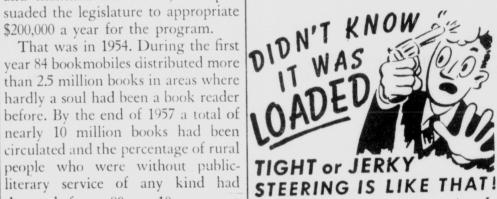

Life on a traveling bookstall is not the usual routine to which most librarians are trained. The bookmobile workers have to be alert for flat tires, breakdowns, dog bites, and brooks in which to wash their hands. Four women librarians on the two bookmobiles operating out of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., do all their own driving. December temperatures were down to 14 below zero, but they never missed a day.

They love their work because it is needed and appreciated. Their fingers and feet may be cold, but satisfying readers' hunger for books gives them a warm glow inside. "When you take off on a lonely road where there are a few houses and you know you may have car trouble before you get back, you wonder if it's really worthwhile," says a Southern librarian. "But when you reach your destination and children and old folks run out with books in their hands to greet you, and you know they are eager for more to read, it makes you feel good. A book on a shelf is a drab object, but in the hands of an eager, bright-eyed child who has never owned one, it is a thrill to see."

The people in the hills and hollows take the little literary wagons to their hearts-and show their devotion by giving them names. "Bouncing Betsy" has been stuck in the mud and had to be pulled out of irrigation ditches, gone through whipping sandstorms and heavy snow in the eastern plains of New Mexico. "Teakettle" consistently boils over on the steep grades of Antelope Valley, California. Librarians in Hawaii called their beautiful new bookwagon "Holoholo akamai," Hawaiian for "traveling knowledge." A fourthgrade youngster in Westhampton, Mass., named the one there when, on his first inspection tour of the new, white vehicle, he looked around and said, "It's the Moby Dickmobile."

These gay little libraries on wheels are more than cheerful distributors of a wide variety of good books; they are educational ladders which more and more people are climbing to a better life.

New Generation Man

Av Westin is CBS's twenty-nineyear-old wonder boy in the news department who had a lot to do with winning for the network the Peabody Award for public service for news specials such as the ones on "The Ruble War," the Middle East, Quemoy and Matsu. A producer. director and writer, Westin is also the only New York man to get his masters degree at Columbia University on a one-year CBS fellowship.

"The fellowship idea is a wonderful one. Every business and industry should have these fellowships. I can say so now even though I had to take a healthy cut in salary to take the fellowship. TV is a business. You have to devote a huge percentage of your time in nonthinking directions -- well, things like arranging facilities and talking with your lighting man--you wouldn't have a show if you didn't do that. This detracts from the time you have to sit down and reflect on what you're doing. The pressures of this business are inexorable. You can ask my wife how many times I jump up in the middle of the night worrying about this idea or that one or getting a new one."

"Getting up to Columbia, you were free of any of these pressures; you had time to reorganize your approach to things. Another great thing--I had to know the answers myself. When my professor asked me why the Russians didn't take part in the Korean war, I couldn't turn to my researcher and ask for four pages on that. I had to know myself.

"TV is criticized for being a vapid industry. In the public image left by movies like "The Great Man," there's always a beautiful secretary lying in some inner office. Well, the guys in special news work pretty hard. I and all the guys there know all about the different size rockets, the foot poundage and all that. Before I went to Japan to do the wedding of the emperor's son, I read up on Japanese fairy tales. You can have someone else do the research but sooner or later you have to do your own reading."

The news specials Westin and his group are doing are fairly new in they're much closer to the news -that is, if there's a crisis in the Middle East they get the show on the next day, not in six months; there is a high degree of pure show business ("You can't be an absolute egghead in TV; you have to try to bring up the tail of a long line of people who have varying degrees of awareness.") and lastely, they have been unexpectedly popular.

"Last summer, when 'Twenty-One' gave way to 'The $64,000 Question,' there was a one-week lapse in programming and CBS stuck us in that time period. We came away with a 21-plus rating and we he got out of New York University ing on is the population explosion had less than a week to do the show in; it was the one on Quemoy and Matsu. Also, it has been found that in dealing with this sort of news show, there is a curious ratio or progression. For instance, we believe that a ten-minute show is not show but four times as good. Yet Alger story, if you will." fifteen minutes is not really long enough to include all the details, the nuances of something like -well -- the integration crisis.

"We discovered that to be fair -equal time doesn't mean anything. Sometimes one man can sum up his side quicker and easier and more eloquently than the other side. Sometimes one man says it so well that you ought to give the other side ten men.'

At twenty-nine, Westin has been at CBS ten years, starting even before

Kindergarten Registration

Any child five years old now, or becoming five by January 31, 1960, is eligible for kindergarten next September. The Home and School Visitor, James Fales, has taken a census during the summer and the school principals have been checking with the help of their older students. If no one has called at your house by Monday, April 20, or you are in doubt about the Home and School Visitor stopping in last summer, call the nearest elementary school and check.

Registration dates are scheduled for April 20 to May 8. Parents will be notified as to the specific day and time, and all are urged to come to school, bringing with them their child's vaccination and State birth certificates. Registration will be completed at this time and there will be a meeting with the kindergarten teacher to discuss various phases of the kindergarten curriculum.

All children attending kindergarten this year are already registered for first grade in September. Any child six years old now, or becoming six by January 31, 1960, and not in kindergarten, should be registered. This may be done by calling your school principal for an appointment.

Entertainment of next year's kindergarten children will begin the first week in May. This preview into kindergarten life helps make the child's beginning next fall a pleasant one. The different schools will give the parents notice when they are to bring their children.

Kindergarten gives boys and girls the background needed to get off to a fine start in their school life. They learn how to get along together, become interested in reading, and learn the skills needed to the words of Bill Rea, Warren. the school bell cleaned up. start first grade.

START BASEBALL PRACTICE

The Warren Rockets baseball club has commenced practice for its second season of play in the Intercity Baseball circuit, which will be composed of six teams this season.

In addition to the Warren nine, the league will be comprised of the Ludlow Wildcats, Jamestown Art Metal, and Dunkirk Koch's Beer, entrants in last year's loop, the Jamestown Merchants, composed of last year's championship Marlin Rockwell team, and Onoville, N.Y., a team augmented by players from last season's Jamestown Moose

GOLF PLANS

Warren country club golfers will play at least three team matches this summer, if present plans do not go awry. A league of golf clubs is being formed on an experimental basis. The matches will be played along the lines of the old Four-Peny league.

A quadrennial match is scheduled for June 13, when sixteen golfers from each of four clubs will square off in foursomes at Oil City. Warren, Titusville, and probably Corry will be the visitors. There will be a dinner and dance following the competition.

Warren also has scheduled two matches with Titusville. The Drakemen will come to Warren June 27 and Warren will visit Titusville August 8. The Warren golfers have been asked to participate in an

Your telephone neighbors are making key contributions to our Nation's defense

Many telephone skills are important to defense . . . and since Bell combines in one organization research, development, design, manufacture and operation, it can do things no other group could be expected to do.

Start with the telephone itself . . . the vast communications link which is vital to defense because it binds together every community in our land . . . with many different voice routes connecting major cities and with alternate routes bypassing critical target areas in Pennsylvania and throughout the country.

Then turn to the products of telephone research which are constantly being used by Pennsylvania Bell engineers to improve your telephone service ... and you find them playing major roles in major defense projects.

Like the construction of the DEW Line, for example . . . the continent-wide chain of Arctic radar stations designed to provide distant early warning of air attack (55 men of Pennsylvania Bell joined in this project) . . .

Like the development and manufacture of the several Nike missile systems, including one that can electronically track down and destroy hostile aircraft and another that holds promise as a defense against ballistic missiles . . .

Like the discovery and application of the transistor, which is essential to accurate missile guidance and also helps relay information from man-placed satellites . . .

And like a wide array of other defense tasks, large and small, some so secret only a few people know of them.

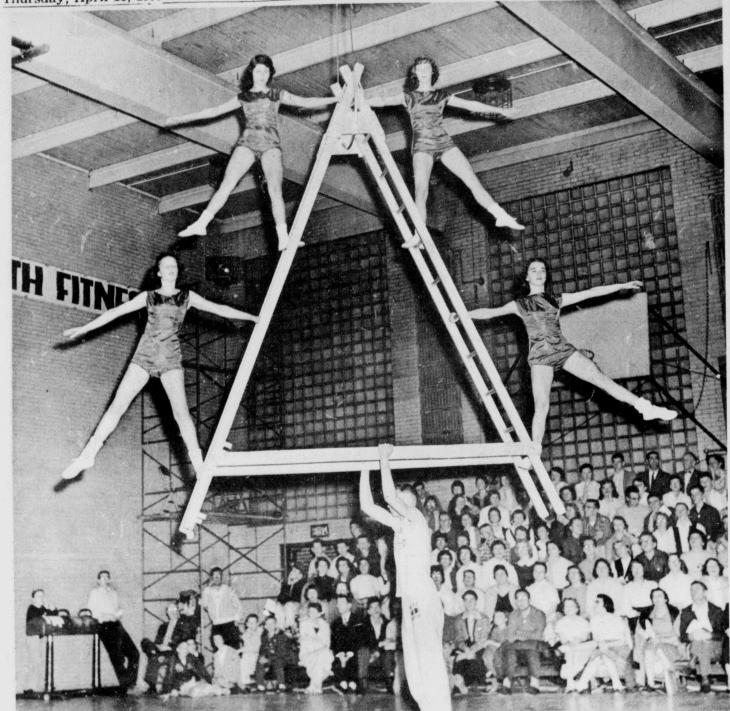

Every day, in many different places and many different ways, telephone people of many skills are strengthening our Nation's defense . . .

To protect your world.
